* _Photoshop Elements:_ When you can't afford Photoshop, get a subscription to Elements, which is the free edition of Photoshop. It offers most of the same features found in Photoshop but is designed for non-professionals. It has a limited set of tools and overlays. * _GIMP:_ A completely free alternative to Photoshop, GIMP is a graphic editor for both Windows and Macs. GIMP is open source software, meaning that the source code is free to download and examine. You can test out a copy of the program for free. GIMP is a very powerful graphics application, and the fact that it is free software and can be run on both Windows and Macs makes it the choice of many creators and retouchers. * _Affinity Photo:_ With a similar focus to Photoshop but at a lower price, if you like most of the same tools as Photoshop, you may want to consider Affinity Photo, which is the entry-level edition of Affinity Designer. Q: How do I parse a float from a text file in C++ without having to use Boost? I need to read a float from a text file using C++ and either have it parse an integer (which reads integers from a text file and converts them to floats), or convert it into a float. I know there are a lot of questions similar to this but they are all answered with the use of Boost, which I have already included. I would like to keep it simple for my own learning if possible. A: Read this before you include boost: Why would anyone want to use Boost for parsing? You can instead use the standard C++ locale's parse function: #include #include #include ... // open the file std::ifstream input_file("in.txt", std::ios_base::in | std::ios_base::binary | std::ios_base::ate); // set the current locale to parse from std::locale loc; loc.imbue(std::locale::classic()); // convert the input to float float input_value = std::stod(input_file, loc); A: boost::lexical_cast exists for this purpose : (modified from cplusplus.com) #include //... boost::lexical_cast(xxx); Pattern of leukocyte count variation by age in healthy adults. This study aimed to examine whether the age-related patterns of leukocyte counts differ by gender. Peripheral blood leukocyte count was measured with a hematology analyzer in a subpopulation of the Tehran Lipid and Glucose study. This study included 2342 subjects (female/male ratio 1:1.24, age range 18 to 80 years) from Tehran, Iran. We compared the mean and range of monocytes, lymphocytes, neutrophils and eosinophils across age and gender groups. In addition, we examined differences in the pattern of leuk
