Q: Do we have any questions from graduate stats? I am a graduate student in pure math/statistics and have a Ph.D in math. I will be teaching undergraduates at my school. Would someone be willing to answer my questions regarding statistics? I am usually teaching or tutoring graduate students, not undergraduates.

A: Your situation sounds pretty reasonable to me. You seem like you'd be a great addition to a class, and since I teach graduate-level courses that are very statistics heavy, I'd definitely consider having you.

A: The following list of common questions comes from my experience in an introductory statistics class:

- Is statistical inference not an oxymoron? This was the question asked by a non-mathematician. Why don't you use the word "significant" instead of "statistically significant" if you are making a statistical claim?
- How much research have you done in this area?

What is the difference between an hypothesis and a hypothesis test? How does the confidence interval work? How does the hypothesis test work? What's the difference between a hypothesis test and a hypothesis? Why is the p-value used to determine if a result is statistically significant? It seems like it's a weak measure of the strength of the result and/or hypothesis. When are only a few observations enough? Why can't I use the significance level in this situation? Why do you need the number of degrees of freedom
