We are satisfied, however, that the plaintiff is not entitled to a stay of removal, because the mother stated that she was not abandoning the children. There is no indication that the mother has removed the children from Massachusetts to New Jersey without plaintiff's consent. ISLAMABAD (Reuters) - Military courts will next week decide the fate of a man who was convicted of blasphemy in the Pakistani city of Lahore and sentenced to death for insulting Islam, a Lahore court official said on Thursday. Slideshow (2 images) Ahmed Raza Khan, a 55-year-old bricklayer and father of nine, was arrested in February 2015 and sent to jail for 100 days for creating "derogatory" content on the Internet. He was convicted in December 2015 in a blasphemy court for saying Allah is the Antichrist and for having "insulted" the Prophet Mohammad, a crime punishable by death under Pakistani law. When the accused was on trial, a video surfaced of him being beaten and kicked by a mob during his arrest. The activist organization Human Rights Watch released a report saying Khan was assaulted by police. Rights groups, including the U.S.-based watchdog, said that in 2013 and 2014 the government enforced a repressive blasphemy law with excessive prosecutions, and that Pakistan's Supreme Court curtailed the use of the law in February. However, rights activists have alleged the government has continued to allow authorities to prosecute people on blasphemy charges. Lahore magistrate Iqbal Chaudhary told the court that a decision would be announced soon regarding whether to release Khan. It is common in Pakistan for convicts sentenced to death to be freed after death sentences are commuted to life imprisonment, but in a landmark case in October, a Federal Court declared that such mercy would not be granted when the death sentence is for blasphemy. "On the issue of his status as a prisoner in connection with his sentence, he is considered as an absconder, because he did not appear for his trial," he added. "I would not like to say anything further." Khan was arrested on Feb. 20, 2015, and sentenced to death on April 26, 2015.
