Jan. 21, 2014; Chicago, IL, USA; Los Angeles Kings defenseman Willie Mitchell (9) controls the puck in the offensive zone during the second period against the Chicago Blackhawks at United Center. Mandatory Credit: Rob Grabowski-USA TODAY Sports Last season was a pretty good learning experience for the final-season-eligible defenseman, who was in the press for a great number of errors before he was dealt to the St. Louis Blues. His versatility was something that Buffalo has desired in the back end for a long time, and Mitchell has shown that he can play both right and left sides in the defensive end. We got a look at his potential at last year's development camp, where he showed off good mobility and a pretty good shot. He was selected to take part in the 2013 AHL All-Star Game, and he has already made a huge impact for the Blues this year. 2014-15 Season Summary: Mitchell was traded to the Blues from the Los Angeles Kings in February of 2014. The defenseman played in 33 games for the Kings, scoring four goals and three assists. Last season with the Kings he played 21 games, notching three goals and two assists. Strengths: Handed out a lot of minutes last season, and he showed that he has really learned his craft by the time he was traded to the St. Louis Blues. He brings toughness to the table, and has a very high potential for the future. Weaknesses: Lack of strength is something that has to be worked on, as he lacks in the lower parts of his body. Development Area of Need: For the development of Mitchell, he will need to work on playing a more defined defensive game. He has the mobility and potential to make himself a very good defenseman, but he'll have to dedicate himself to the defensive aspects of the game. Career Potential: With the way Mitchell played last season, especially playing top-minutes
