Full gameplay video here The player's motions are captured on-screen and superimposed onto a prototype running, passing and shooting system in the game engine. The data is also used to optimise ball physics and touch-related items on the pitch. "The FIFA community is the most passionate football community in the world, so we have always focused on creating the best football gameplay. The speed of the game and the intensity of the action means players have to be even quicker and more accurate with their decisions," said John Hightower, Senior Producer at EA Canada. "FIFA 22 delivers the most authentic-feeling and responsive football simulation on any console by using our own groundbreaking technology to truly adapt to your on-field style of play." The other three remastered classic series this year, Madden, NBA 2K and NHL 2K are based on the "player animations" in the game. FIFA 22 launches worldwide on October 11.
