almost forgot. My dad has the other '60s Batman comics! He says they're not worth much, but he'll keep them in his collection. (Besides, I'm the one who has to dig through them.)'Cause these comics were out of print then, you know?So he gave me a few more books to dig through, but oh, those wagons were great and all, but..... Man, these last ones were a disaster!So, like my dad, I keep the great stuff out in the open. The stuff that's not worth much, I keep tucked away in my desk drawer. Bet ya didn't know you could reach into an 8"x10" floppy disk drive! Remember what a floppy disk was? Or that this year is the 30th anniversary of the release of Star Wars: Return of the Jedi? Last summer I had an 8"x10" floppy drive board made for my '72-73 Star Wars model car. Some kids at my local hobby shop had a model auto show. When I found out that Star Wars was going to be a preview movie, I planned to display the model car at the show. Then, they found out about the set I already had and asked if I wanted to display the film at the show. So, I went through the effort of building the model car just for that show. Then, I could display the model car for two shows. Oh, well. At least I had the display. One thing that was different about this show was the store owner was taking orders on films and figures. To help in attracting customers, he offered a deal. If you ordered 10 copies of a film or figure, you could use them all at the show (except that he had to wrap each film and figure separately). I couldn't make that deal so I only had two films to offer. Still, what was offered was cool: So that's another benefit of a local hobby shop. I had over 100 SCU bases and tons of extra poses. Why make more money at the show? This local shop didn't have to. Why waste the money?
